

Laura Warren Hill is the Associate Vice President for Academic Affairs and Professor of History and Africana Studies at Bloomfield College where she began teaching in 2010. Her teaching interests center on the history of race, gender and class in the United States and beyond, with a particular interest in social movements and how the dispossessed act as agents in society and politics. Dr. Warren Hill regularly attends pedagogical development events and is an ACUE certified teacher.

She is the author of Strike the Hammer While the Iron is Hot: Rochester's Black Freedom Struggle, 1940-1970 (Cornell University Press, April 2021). She is the co-editor (with Julia Rabig) of The Business of Black Power: Community Development, Capitalism and Corporate America in the Postwar Era (University of Rochester Press, 2012). She authored "We Are Black Folks First: The Black Freedom Struggle in Rochester, NY and the Making of Malcolm X" published in The Sixties: A Journal of History, Politics, and Culture. Dr. Warren Hill has also contributed a chapter entitled "'Let Those Negroes Have Their Whiskey': White Responses in a Decade of Racial Unrest" to The Strange Careers of Jim Crow: Segregation and Struggle Outside the South, eds. Brian Purnell and Jeanne Theoharis, with Komozi Woodard (New York University Press, 2019).

Dr. Warren Hill frequently attends and presents at conferences, including the Association for the Study of African American Life and History (ASALH); the Urban History Association (UHA); the Organization of American Historians (OAH); and Researching New York, among others. She has authored posts for Black Perspectives, the online blog of the African American Intellectual History Association and served as a reviewer for several presses and journals. She has written book reviews for The Black Scholar, the Oral History Review, the Journal of African American History, Enterprise and Society, and the Journal of American History. In 2015, Dr. Warren Hill was selected as a participant in the NEH Summer Seminar, Rethinking Black Freedom Studies from the Jim Crow North to the Jim Crow West in 2015, which she credits with furthering her intellectual development and community.
